Chinese and Japanese Gardeners Lead the World

While living in Japan in 1916-17, I had the opportunity of testing the most tender and finest tasting vegetables, many of which weigh pounds while our weigh ounces and are often tough and course.

Our radishes are small and spongey, Japanese Radishes weigh up to 26 pounds, are tender, and when packed in sand in the cool basement will remain solid all winter.

Our green onions are about an inch long. The Japanese long Green Onion often weigh one pound and over.

Our cucumbers, mostly seed, are from 6 to 10 inches long: the Japanese cucumbers grow 36 inches long and are very tender and have few seeds.

You can say the same for eggplant, peppers, etc.

The average American garden is larger than a farm in the Far East that supports a large family.

These vegetables are raised on my farm and they do well.

While many who will receive this list may not have a garden, they have friends on a farm who would gladly divide if supplied with seed they never heard of before.

One package of Winter Radish seed will produce several hundred pounds of radishes. A package of cucumber seed will supply many families, and many dollars worth of seed which can be sold to others next year.

Look over the list. A few cents will save you $100 on your vegetable bill.
